3 BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF NORTH DAKOTA:

4 SECTION 1. Definitions. As used in this Act:

- 1. "Custodian" means a person who possesses personal medical information that is subject to the disclosure restrictions in this Act.
- 2. "Legal representative" includes legal custodian and a parent of a minor child.
- 3. "Personal medical information" means oral or recorded information concerning an individual's past, present, or future physical or mental health or condition, including physical condition, identifying physical characteristics, health history, evaluation, tests, diagnosis, treatment, and prescribed drugs, medical devices, or health care equipment or supplies, which has been:
 - a. Provided by the individual for the purpose of obtaining or requesting any kind of goods, services, or employment; or
 - b. Generated by any person in the course of, or as a result of, responding to the individual's request for goods or services or providing goods or services in an emergency in which the individual, or the individual's legal representative, is unable to request the goods or services.
- 4. "Subject" means the individual who is the subject of an item of personal medical information.
- 5. "Third party" means any custodian to whom personal medical information is properly disclosed under this Act other than the custodian who originally obtained the information from the subject or generated the information in response to the subject's request for goods or services.

SECTION 2. Right to privacy in medical information. Every individual in this state has a right to privacy in the individual's personal medical information. Disclosure of personal medical information by a provider of goods, services, or employment, to a person other than the subject of the personal medical information, including secondary disclosure and internal disclosure to an employee of the provider, is permitted only with the prior written consent of the subject or the subject's legal representative or as required by law or authorized in this Act.

SECTION 3. Form of written consent. A subject's consent to disclosure of the subject's personal medical information is valid only if it is expressed in a separate written release that is signed and dated by the subject or the subject's legal representative. The release must contain a general description of the personal medical information to be disclosed, the reason for the disclosure, the custodian who will be disclosing the information, and the person to whom the information will be disclosed. The release also must identify the exclusive uses that may be made of the information. A release is binding on any third party to whom the information is disclosed pursuant to the release. The release must also state the length of time the release is valid, not to exceed three years, and state that the release may be revoked at any time by written communication to the custodian. If the release is not prepared by the subject of the personal medical information, the release must be written in an easily understood manner and contain a notice in substantially the following form:

Your signature on this document authorizes the disclosure of the listed items of your personal medical information to the listed persons. Any use of your personal medical information other than the uses listed in this document or specifically authorized by law is prohibited. This release expires three years from the date it is signed, unless an earlier date is specified in this document. You may revoke this release in writing at any time.

SECTION 4. Permitted uses of personal medical information without consent.

This Act does not prohibit the following disclosures of personal medical information without the prior written consent of the subject:

Disclosure to employees of the custodian or to third parties to the extent necessary for the custodian to respond to a request for goods or services from the subject or the subject's legal representative or to provide goods or services to the subject in

- an emergency in which the subject, or the subject's legal representative, is unable to request the goods or services.
 - Disclosure to the extent necessary to obtain payment for the goods or services requested by or provided to the subject, including disclosures that are incident to a court proceeding to obtain payment.
 - 3. Disclosure to a federal, state, or local government agency in response to a court order or a subpoena issued by a court or a government agency.
 - 4. Disclosure to a third party to assist the custodian in obtaining legal, medical, accounting, or other professional services.
 - 5. Disclosure that is incidental to the sale of the custodian's business.
 - 6. Disclosure for research or statistical purposes which does not identify the subject and which could not reasonably lead to the subject's identification.
 - 7. Disclosure to any person legally authorized to make health care decisions on behalf of the subject.
 - 8. Any other disclosure required by federal or state law or regulations or authorized under chapter 23-01.3.
 - SECTION 5. Third-party recipients of personal medical information. Any third party to whom personal medical information is properly disclosed under this Act is subject to this Act and may not further disclose the information except as authorized in this Act or with a proper written release that has been independently obtained from the subject or the subject's legal representative.
 - SECTION 6. Right to access. Any custodian who has used personal medical information to deny the subject's request for goods or services must give the subject the opportunity to correct any inaccuracies in the information. The custodian also must notify the subject of the personal medical information that was used to deny the request, from whom the information was obtained, and of the right to correct any inaccuracies.
 - SECTION 7. Public records exemption. Personal medical information in the possession or control of a public entity is an exempt record as defined in section 44-04-17.1 unless made confidential under any other law.
 - SECTION 8. Restriction on obtaining medical information. A provider of goods or services may not require a subject to provide more personal medical information than is

- reasonably necessary to respond to the subject's request for goods or services, establish the relationship between the subject and the provider or maintain the relationship, protect against
- 3 fraud or unauthorized transactions, or comply with applicable law. Any additional personal
- 4 medical information that is requested must be specified as optional and the subject must be
- 5 given the option not to provide it. A subject who chooses not to provide optional information
- 6 may not be denied goods or services as a result of that refusal.

SECTION 9. No-contact lists. Upon request by the subject of personal medical information, a custodian shall refrain from using the information to contact the subject once the requested goods or services have been provided and payment for the goods or services has been received. This section does not apply to warnings or notices of deficiencies in the goods or services provided.

SECTION 10. Safeguards. A custodian shall use reasonable care to protect the confidentiality of personal medical information and to safeguard the information from loss, misuse, theft, unauthorized access, disclosure, defacement, or alteration.

SECTION 11. Violations - Penalty.

- A violation of this Act by a custodian who is licensed by the state to engage in a profession, occupation, or service, is grounds for the appropriate licensing authority in this state to take disciplinary action against the custodian.
- 2. In addition to other legal remedies, a subject whose personal medical information is disclosed in violation of this Act is entitled to recover five hundred dollars or the amount of any actual damages to the individual, whichever is greater, in a civil court action in any court of competent jurisdiction. A subject who brings a successful action for a violation of this Act is entitled to court costs and reasonable attorney's fees incurred in the action.

SECTION 12. More restrictive laws. Nothing in this Act authorizes disclosure of personal medical information which is prohibited by any other federal or state law or regulation.
