MOTION

REP. VIGESAA MOVED that a committee of two be appointed to escort the Honorable Byron Dorgan, United States Senator, to the podium, which motion prevailed. Speaker Monson appointed Reps. Ekstrom and Wolf to the escort committee.

REMARKS OF THE HONORABLE SENATOR BYRON DORGAN

Mr. Speaker and Leader Carlson, Leader Boucher, and all of you who serve here. I'm just sitting in the back observing this ethic and I was lead to believe by news reports that this was a tough job and that you were having some very difficult times and I noticed a 92 to 2 vote. This looks like a pretty easy situation over here. In fact I've stopped at probably the only place in America where there is a lot of money. I come from the United States Senate and late last evening I think we finished about 10:00, and we as you know are fairly well in debt and plan to figure out what to do about it. I'm visiting an area where you are meeting as a Legislative Assembly with a surplus and actually a fair amount of economic recovery funds as well to deal with. So I know that you are ending your session, I know that you've undoubtedly worked hard, and you are less appreciated than you should be. You are part of what is called a legislative process. I was thinking about a guy that was known as the guy from Makoti, North Dakota, the Flying Farmer from Makoti. Does anybody here know him? His name was John Smith. I don't know if he's still doing it, he used to jump cars and things at these county fairs--the flying farmer from Makoti--by the way this North Dakotan is in the Guinness Book of World Records. He drove a car 500 miles around a track in reverse averaging 36 miles an hour. I'm thinking there is a resemblance here to our legislative process. We go backward and backward and backward and then all of a sudden we sling forward and accomplish a lot in a hurry and that is kind of the way it is at the end of a session I'm sure here. It certainly is in Washington, D.C. Thank you for the invitation to say a few words.

I want to talk to you about two things just briefly--water and energy. I am privileged to chair the appropriations panel in the United States Senate that funds energy and water projects across the country, and we have as you know in this state, significant challenges with respect to both water, and energy. The Red River has once again reared its head with unbelievable flooding. But it's not just the Red, it's the Sheyenne and the James and the Missouri and the Cannonball and so many more rivers in North Dakota that have been hit with an unbelievable challenge. I must say even as difficult as the challenge has been, equally inspiring has been the observation that all of us have made--you and me about our constituents and what they have done. They didn't sit back and say, "Let me see if somebody will call me and want some help," they said, "I'm gonna be there, I'm gonna fight this flood, I wanna fill those sandbags." Nobody had to ask them, nobody had to call them, they just showed up. And it's kind of the heart of North Dakota, which is such a good heart, and so it reminds all of us that ordinary people do extraordinary things in times of challenge. So now as the waters recede, there are two things--we help repair and help recover. A whole lot of folks are hurting. So we begin that process that requires local, state, and federal responsibilities, and we will be involved with that in a very aggressive way. Then in addition to that, the question is what kind of flood protection do we now believe is necessary in addition to that which exist and where is it necessary.

But let me stop just for a moment to say this to you. I'm going to talk about Fargo-Moorhead, our largest metropolitan area. In the Red River Valley, for example, we need to find innovative ways to store water, we need much greater storage to try to move some of this water, and keep it off the stream for awhile. There are a lot of things we can and should and will do to take a look at the entire Valley. Someone once described it as a tabletop with a scratch and the scratch is the river of course, but it just spreads everywhere when the water comes. What do we do in the entire Valley to deal with storage and other issues to protect all the communities up and down the Valley? But especially our largest metropolitan area, Fargo and Moorhead, what do we do? What is necessary? We have a significant flood control project that is nearly completed now in Wahpeton and Breckenridge. A large flood control project was completed in Grand Forks and East Grand Forks. We have a flood control project in West Fargo called Sheyenne Diversion. Some work has been done, the Ridgewood Addition and others in the area of Fargo, but there is not a comprehensive flood control project in Fargo and Moorhead, and you can't do it for one city. Rivers run in both directions and fall off both sides and whatever is done on the comprehensive basis for Fargo and Moorhead has to be done together. That means two states and two cities and that combination of what we determine we wish to fund.

Now I want to make a couple points here because I think it is very important. Flood control projects start from the bottom-up. I'll give you an example of that--Grafton, North Dakota. I put in, beginning in 2000, money to study a comprehensive flood control project to Grafton because that is what it wanted to do. It bore a share of the cost for the study. When the study was completed by the Corps of Engineers, it turned out the comprehensive program would cost $32 million and the people of Grafton had a vote and voted two-to-one to scrap it. They didn't want to do it. As a result that project has not gone forward. Why? This is bottom-up. This is not top-down. With respect to Fargo and Moorhead, there is not a federal flood control plan in Fargo and Moorhead. There will only be a plan that will be 65 percent federally funded when and if there is a consensus among local and state governments about the kind of project they want studied and then built. I would say this to you, when that happens, and I hope it happens sooner rather than later, I am committed as a chairman of a committee that funds these issues. I am committed to find the federal funding to make it happen. I am committed to do that. The Governor and I are going to jointly host a meeting of the interests of Minnesota and North Dakota very soon to talk about Fargo-Moorhead and a comprehensive flood control planning process to figure out how does that planning process start and conclude at the local level. Following that on May 27, I will chair a hearing in Fargo of my appropriation subcommittee that will eventually be required to fund that project. At that hearing we will continue the process of trying to determine how does this plan come together so that there is a consensus in Fargo and Moorhead. But I say to you this, that when all of this is complete, and when Fargo and Moorhead and North Dakota and Minnesota have made a decision about what they wish to have occur for a comprehensive flood control project, I will make a commitment to you that I intend to be involved in funding as chairman of the subcommittee that provides that funding. I especially want all of you to understand the circumstances at the bottom and I say that because I've heard talk radio and other things saying--when will the Feds step up, why hasn't the Fed built a plan, there is no plan, and the federal government does not come and describe a plan. Local governments reach a consensus on what they want. Then it's said you can determine this need to cross benefit ratio. If it does we build it and I will commit to be an active partner in helping you. I will find my 65 percent and you'll have your 35 percent and we'll get that done, but let me also mention to you that even as we talk about this I want to tell you that the mayor, the city councils of Fargo and Moorhead, the county commissioners, and all of the folks including legislators and others...my hats off to them. I salute them. They battled that Red River and they battled it to at least a draw and probably you could call it a win, but I know they didn't sleep very much, so the fact that there isn't a local project, it's not their fault. There has not been a consensus in those communities. But there has to become a consensus at some point. I don't want anyone to take from this discussion any criticism of the folks that run that local government because they have done an extraordinary job in my judgment fighting that Red River.

Now let me mention one additional point to you on Devils Lake. Devils Lake is something over 14.47 at this point. There is a 100 percent chance according to the National Weather Service that it is going to exceed the record level of flooding over 14.49, and there is up to a 50 percent chance it is going to increase 5 feet this year. Two years ago I began appropriating funding for the Corps to begin studying to increase the dike that protects us from Devils Lake. We will now this year trigger that urgency, and when that urgency is triggered, it is going to cost about $125 million, $31 million of which will be the responsibility of state and local governments. That is a 75/25 match. The President has just asked for an emergency supplemental bill for defense and I'm going to try to get the $125 million of the federal share that is 75 percent of it added to that so that we can begin this. It will take two construction seasons but we can't wait. If we have a five-foot increase in Devils Lake we can't wait to begin raising that levy. That will impose a $31 million local cost. Generally that has been split 50/50 between the state legislature and Devils Lake. As you know Devils Lake doesn't have that kind of money, they are not going to come up with $15 million. I know that you all are putting money away and putting some reserves here and there, I just wanted to alert you that if I get done what I hope to get done in the coming weeks for this 75 percent of the $125 million, the other $31 million you need to plan for. Because we can't proceed on the levy project unless the state and local funding is in place, so that's something I want to talk to all of you about as we proceed because Devils Lake is going to have to be dealt with this year--beginning this year with respect to the new levy.

Let me finally say to you, with respect to energy, which is very important to our state. We are now involved in writing an energy bill and we are going to do several things. One, we are going to have a renewable energy standard of at least 15 percent. All electricity must be produced with 15 percent renewable interest, renewable energy. In order to do that if we want more wind production in North Dakota, and we will have more wind production, it is not because we need the energy, we don't. We have all the energy we can use in North Dakota. We have to move it somewhere that needs it. In order to do that, we have to have an interstate highway of transmission capability that is modern and connected across the country but doesn't exist. Let me tell you an example of what we've found. In the last 9 years we have built 11,000 miles of natural gas pipelines and in this country. In 9 years we built 11,000 miles of natural gas pipeline and in the same period we have been able to build 680 miles of high-voltage transmission lines interstate. That describes to you the failure immediately. You can't get these things built interstate and we are going to put together a plan. We will have state and local governments always involved in the upfront planning process, but if ultimately it gets maxed out by any one of the number of levels of government, you have to have a backstop to be able to site it and allow a pricing mechanism to site it and move forward so that we can build a transmission capability. We cannot solve our energy problems and we certainly can maximize the capability of renewable energy without a modern transmission capability. And so we're determined to do that. We're going to do an RES of 15 percent renewable energy standard of 15 percent, we're going to do transmission and we're going to modernize and connect America with a transmission grid. I support drilling, I don't know if we are going to get it done, but I want us to drill. I believe that we ought to open up most all of the eastern Gulf of Mexico which is where the greatest reserves of our yet untapped exist. I also believe that is the lowest hanging fruit by far. We're going to do this according to the McKenzie study on energy, the lowest hanging fruit is conservation. Retrofitting buildings in America is by far the most cost-effective way to produce or save energy. By far it is not even close.

Then, in addition, I want to talk to you just for a second about coal. Our most abundant resource in this country is coal and we have to be very careful about those who want us to decide that we cannot use coal in the future. One-half of all electricity in this country comes from coal sources. The fact is that we have to use coal differently, I understand that. We have to decarbonize coal. I put $4 billion, that's $4 billion in the last 12 months, in carbon capture research and technology. We can do this. We can decarbonize the use of coal. We can find other ways to use it. Let me describe to you a man named Dr. Craig Venter. He is one of the two people that created the human genome project--the first owner's manual for the human body that is changing all of medicine. Dr. Venter now has a couple hundred scientists working on energy. He has turned all of his prodigious talents to energy. He is working on synthetic microbes that would be imbedded into coal seams and shore up the coal and produce methane gas. That's another technical term by the way. Synthetic microbes that eat the coal and the coal becomes methane gas. Wouldn't that be interesting if you could turn our most abundant resource into gas? There is a fellow from California who has just patented the process. He says, "I've got the silver bullet on how to decarbonize coal," and he said, I have a process that you take the flue gas and chemically treat it and you produce a product that is harder, better, and has more value than concrete that would reduce the cost of carbon to zero, producing a value-added product that traps all of the CO₂. See, I am convinced we can do this.

One of the things we have to worry about is those who believe we have to shut down the use of coal. We can't shut down the use of coal. We need to maximize renewables, we need to drill for more oil, we need to do a lot of things, but we need to specifically focus our attention on being able to continue to use coal by decarbonizing coal and I am committed to that.

One final point, following energy. There is a big debate in my own caucus right now because some want to bring energy, and climate change before the Senate together. I strongly oppose that. Following energy, the issue is climate change. I am not happy at all about the notion of creating a new trading system. I've watched what has happened, this notion of cap and trade. I've watched what has happened last year to run up the price of oil to $147 per barrel and day trading having nothing to do with supply and demand. I'm not very anxious to hook anything to a new system of trading carbon credits in some sort of new financial trading system. I don't know what is going to happen or how we are going to fashion whether it is a carbon feed or a cap and trade system with some sort of ceiling. I don't know what is going to happen, but I know from my standpoint that I am not very interested in having a bunch of folks with a bunch of money get their mitts on trading credits and have our future and our destiny tied to their interest. I feel very strongly there is something going on with our climate. We need to be attentive to it and you can deal with it, but as we do we have to be smart.

I voted against cloture. I voted against shutting off debate last year in the climate change legislation because I had an amendment that would claw forward some $20 billion that would be invested in the technology and research necessary to find out how we decarbonize coal because I said you can't set up targets and timelines on carbon unless we can have the time and money at the front end to be able to meet those guidelines. Otherwise you are setting yourselves up for failure and I have no interest in voting for failure. We can do this if we are smart. We can do this if we are positive. And we can do this if we decide to do it the right way. I'm going to work very hard to make that happen because you all and we all and our constituents in North Dakota have a big stake in this issue. No state in this country has the greater potential to produce a greater variety of all kinds of energy than we do. But much of it will be stranded if we don't find a way to build transmission lines and find a way to build the pipelines and others to move it where it is needed. But if we do, and I think we can, I think we are going to have quite an unbelievable future here in North Dakota in energy.

Now, finally, these are issues that are very very big, and there are many other issues, but they require that we work together even if we have disagreements, and they require that we respect each other. This is a process called politics. John F. Kennedy used to say that every mother kind of hopes that their child might grow up to be President as long as they don't have to be active in politics. But of course politics is a method by which we make decisions in our country. Politics is something that is honorable and important and you work in that field and you do the best you can for our state. When this is all done and the dust settles and the lights are turned off I hope, I know you believe that North Dakota was well-served by people coming from all corners and points of North Dakota bringing their best to say here is what I believe for the future of our state. God bless you for your work. Thank you very much.

The amendment also requires the Veterans' Home to report to the Budget Section regarding the construction projects when they are complete, rather than when total expenditures exceed $500,000.

The House stood adjourned pursuant to Representative Vigesaa's motion.
