The roll was called and all members were present except Representatives Hager, Hauck, and Warrey.

A quorum was declared by the Speaker.

MOTION

REP. BOSCH MOVED a committee of two be appointed to escort Miss North Dakota, Sidni Kast, to the podium, which motion prevailed.

SPEAKER D. JOHNSON APPOINTED Reps. Hoverson and VanWinkle to the escort committee.

REMARKS OF MISS NORTH DAKOTA SIDNI KAST

Hello everyone and thank you for having me here today to speak to you!

As stated, my name is Sidni Kast. I was born and raised in Minot by my parents Scott and Brenda and today we are also joined by my grandparents Adrian and Shirley who recently celebrated 68 years of marriage last August. I graduated from Minot High School in 2016, went on to get my Biology degree from Minot State University in 2019 and am currently pursuing my doctorate in physical therapy from the University of North Dakota where I will be graduating in May of 2024. But how did I get here, today, speaking to you as Miss North Dakota?

This journey started back in 2019 on a whim, and under my mom's advice of course. I decided to apply for the job of Miss Norsk Hostfest. I did this because the winner would earn a $1,000 scholarship and I knew that was something I needed if I wanted to pursue a doctorate degree as the cost of higher education continues to increase. Following this I was given the option to compete as Miss ND, something I never considered doing but I took a leap of faith for scholarship and the opportunity to sing on a stage again.

That first year I competed I made the top 10 but was cut when they announced the top 5 and felt pretty defeated. I was an athlete all my life so competitive was my middle name. It felt as though I had failed when in reality it just wasn't my time yet.

So I started my education at UND and made the decision to give it one last shot. Because even if I didn't win Miss North Dakota, I would walk away with scholarship dollars for my education, life skills, and friendships.

However, on June 11, 2022, my life changed in ways I never imagined. It was the day I was crowned Miss North Dakota and began the job of a lifetime. To give you a little background on myself, and something I always preface with is I am no stereotypical "pageant girl". In fact MOST of the women who compete in the Miss America Organization aren't. This organization has been around for over 100 years and has evolved with the women who compete in it. It gives young women the opportunity to discover what they are unconditionally passionate about. And the reason I say unconditional is because you as leaders all understand, it is not easy to fight for a cause 24/7 but when you love it, it is worth the sacrifices. And now, through those sacrifices, I can proudly say I have earned roughly $16,000 from the Miss America Organization.

So what is it that I am unconditionally passionate about? As Miss North Dakota I have the opportunity to travel across our beautiful state to speak about what is called my "social impact initiative” which is a cause or issue a title holder speaks about to students, business owners, community members and today, you. The name of my social impact is called the “One Body Movement”. This focuses on a holistic approach to taking care of our bodies each and every day. As a future physical therapist, I will be known as a movement expert. But when I created this idea, I wanted it to be more than movement because our overall health is so much more than that. Specifically I focus on physical, mental, and spiritual health each having a direct correlation to the other and impacting the overall quality of life of each of us. When I explain this to people of all ages I try to make them understand it from a different perspective because oftentimes when we think of health is what we see on Instagram, TV, movies. You know the 12 pack abs and perfectly toned arms but I want people of all ages to know, our health is so much more than what we see on the outside. Our health is not only what we feed our bodies, but what we feed our minds. It is who we surround ourselves with but also how we surround ourselves when we’re alone.

When I go to school and am speaking to students, I compare their bodies to a car. Because our bodies, like a car, are machines that require maintenance. Now I want you to imagine your car or perhaps your dream car. It likely has four tires. Now, I want you to imagine that each of those tires represents a different part of your life. For me those tires include my physical health, my mental health, my social health and my work/school health. Now for each person those tires will likely represent different things because we all have different responsibilities. But have you ever felt there was a moment in your life where one, or maybe even two of those tires were deflated? The low tire pressure light came on or perhaps the tires were just flat? As we all know, if we have a flat tire, the car won’t move forward. Personally I know that a little too well, you could ask my dad (also known as my personal mechanic) if you’d like more details. I’ll give you the perfect example of a real life scenario.

Over the last few months I have been quite busy. From the months of June to December I was jampacked with Miss ND appearances, continuing my graduate program, taking finals all while preparing for Miss America. My school/work life tire was filled to the brim, I had never felt more successful with my accomplishments and felt I was finally reaching my full potential professionally. My physical health was at an all time high as I continued to take care of myself to look and feel my best on stage. But what I wasn’t giving enough energy to, and what was put on the back burner, were my social health and my mental health. I felt my friendships were put on hold, and I wasn’t taking enough time to reflect on how I felt because that time simply did not exist. Has that ever happened to you before where work took priority over family/friends? You spent more time at the office than you did at home?

That is what I was experiencing leading up to Miss America. I had flat tires and I wasn’t able to move forward efficiently. No matter how hard I pressed the gas, I felt stuck. And I think we all do that when it comes to certain events or times of the year. We put some important things on the back burner and it catches up to us. So what I preach when I speak to people, and it’s a message that even I still learn from and consider when I make decisions is we have to find the balance, as best as we can, between our different tires of life. But at the end of the day, even though I’ve made all of these comparisons between a car and our bodies, the biggest difference is this. You can replace the tires on your car, you can replace the entire vehicle if you need to, but you cannot replace your body. Because you are only given one. And that is why I call it the “One Body Movement” because it helps people understand themselves as a whole, and not just their imperfections.

So how do we get people to buy-in to this concept? How do we break down the barriers that society has built up? This brings me to a method that many physical therapists use when getting their patients to buy-in to treatment. We ask the most important question: “what is your why”. Your “why” is the thing that gets you out of bed in the morning, the thing that makes you start something, the thing that makes you, you. I’m guessing when you all started doing this, whether it be 40 years ago or 40 days ago, you each had a why. Whether you’re a business owner, or you just started that new year’s resolution, you probably had a reason to do so. When it comes to our patients, those whys become more simple than you would think. They want to improve on walking so they can keep up with their grandkids. They want to have better balance so they can enjoy a sunset walk on the beach with their spouse. Or there’s that commercial where the grandfather prepares all year lifting weights overhead so when the time comes, he can lift his granddaughter to put the star on top of the Christmas tree. And THAT is what my goal is. It is to show you that taking care of yourself does not have to be for the 12 pack of abs because let’s be honest, it’s unrealistic but that is what society often makes us think we need to be. But instead it should be for those little moments. The things we don’t think about getting to do, until we can’t do them anymore. And the reason I love this topic so much and am so passionate about it is that everyone can relate to it. And a quote that rings true is this: "If you do not make time for your wellness, you will be forced to make time for your illness."

What I believe our state needs is better funding for public education and resources to take care of themselves and help future generations thrive. I have been fortunate to grow up in a community that gave me the tools I needed to succeed in my health journey but not everyone is able to have the same opportunity. Our schools especially need better resources when it comes to mental health as that is often the route of all problems as the mind is our most powerful organ. A statement one of my professors made last year that really struck me was: "your zip code defines your health status". I'll say it again, "your zip code defines your health status". Now if this were 5 years ago and you said that to me I wouldn't really understand it because how could where you live dictate if you were diagnosed with cancer, struggled with disease, or worse. But that just proves how much our environment can influence our health and why we need to put regulations in place that gives each member of society a fighting chance. And it is often these people, with the higher chance of poor health, to be unable to afford the demanding prices of a hospital stay. That is why I am so passionate about educating people on the prevention of illness. But, when I tell people this, the first thing they mention is the cost. Why buy the expensive fruits and vegetables when you can go a cheaper route with the chips. That gym membership is way too much. Therapy? That's not included in my insurance plan! But do you want to know what's more expensive than all of those things combined? Hospital bills. Surgery expenses. But people get so stuck on looking at the cost of today that they don't realize our lives are a lifelong investment. Sooner or later, you have to pay up and it's up to you to decide which route you take.

So perspective is a huge part of all of this right? That's something I've learned when it comes to my own life. It was last spring when I relied on my perspective pretty frequently. Oftentimes, in many graduate programs, the first year is the most challenging. It's time for weaning out of the class, even though our professors obviously want everyone to succeed. You have to prove to them, and to yourself, that you're truly passionate about this profession or else you wouldn't put yourself through such a grueling time. So when I was going through this, and trust me, there were days I asked myself - is this worth it? And I would then remind myself of the Sidni a short year before that very moment. The Sidni who was impatiently waiting for an answer on whether or not she was accepted into the school of her dreams to pursue a field that she knew was the perfect fit for her. So that perspective, that shift in mindset is exactly what got me through a difficult time and is something we can all benefit from.

What I will close with today is the same message I used to close my Miss North Dakota interview AND to close my Miss America interview. It is a quote from the song "Invictus". A song that my high school choir director, Lindsey Kerzmann, shared with me just one week before I became Miss North Dakota. It is about a man in the 1800s who suffered a double amputation of his legs and he wrote these words to show that even though all of the odds were against him, that the world seemed dark, he was not going to let that stop him from prevailing. The quote is "I am the master of my fate, the captain of my soul." These words have stuck with me since that moment and have helped me realize that no matter what happens to me, no matter the failures or success I endure, I will have the power to control my own actions, my own fate and that the only person that can limit me, is myself.

Thank you for having me, if you have any interest in having me speak or make an appearance at your events you can email me at missnorthdakota2022@gmail.com or find me on social media.

MOTION

REP. BOSCH MOVED that the remarks of Miss North Dakota, Sidni Kast, be printed in the Journal, which motion prevailed on a voice vote.

POINT OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

REP. LEFOR rose on a point of personal privilege.

REMARKS OF REPRESENTATIVE LEFOR

Thank you, Mr. Speaker,

Ladies and gentlemen of the assembly, today we celebrate the life of Martin Luther King, Jr.

- 1.He was named after reformer Martin Luther.
- 2.He entered college when he was just 15 years old.
- 3.He survived an assassination attempt a decade before his death.

He was a gifted student that he skipped several grades before enrolling in 1944 at Morehouse College.

On August 28, 1963, in his most famous speech, King stood on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial and called for the end of racism before a crowd of 250,000 people.

An excerpt from that speech and I quote: "I have a dream that one day on the red hills of Georgia, the sons of former slaves and the sons of former slave owners will be able to sit down together at the table of brotherhood. I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character."

On October 4, 1964, he won the Nobel Peace Prize for combating racial inequality through non-violent resistance.

In April 1968, he traveled to Memphis to support the strike of the city's garbage workers and in a speech on the night before his assassination he told an audience, "Like anybody, I would like to live a long life, longevity has its place. But I am not concerned about that now, I have seen the promised land, I may not get there with you. But I want you to know tonight, that we, as people, will get to the promised land. And I'm happy tonight, I'm not worried about anything, I am not fearing any man, mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord." Less than 24 hours later he was murdered.

He was one of the most prominent leaders in the civil rights movement from 1955 to his death in 1968. He advanced civil rights for people of color in the United States through non-violence and civil disobedience.

On December 23, 1988, President Ronald Reagan signed a proclamation declaring a national holiday celebrating the life of Martin Luther King, the president stated that we must reaffirm in every generation the lessons of justice and charity he taught with unflinching determination. Finally, he said, "On Martin Luther King Jr. Day and every day let us unite in prayer and promise to be true to the American Dream he loved and renewed."

POINT OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

REP. ISTA rose on a point of personal privilege.

REMARKS OF REPRESENTATIVE ISTA

Mr. Speaker and Members of the Assembly:

Forty years ago this year, President Ronald Reagan signed legislation enshrining this day as a national day of honor for the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Three years later, in 1986, our great nation celebrated Martin Luther King Jr. Day for the first time. That timing has special significance to me, as it means I've been alive to celebrate exactly every one of the now 38 observances we've had of this special day.

It also means I was born into a time in our Nation's history where the greatness of Dr. King's legacy was already well-established. From the first time I ever learned about Dr. King, I was able to take his greatness for granted, to know him only as the hero of civil rights that we celebrate him as being today. Indeed, I imagine "I have a dream" was among the very first historical quotations I ever learned.

But for me, Dr. King has only ever existed in moving written prose, in grainy audio recordings of long-ago speeches, and, I note not unaware of the irony, in black and white video. A historical figure from a historical time.

But for others, perhaps including some still serving in this body, Dr. King existed as a contemporary, someone who was covered in the nightly news and daily paper. Not a historical figure but someone whose actions and words were judged in real time—and often harshly.

That's why, for as revered as the Rev. Dr. is today, that was not always the case. For as much as the dream Dr. King articulated seems to be a self-evident truth today, that, too, was not always the case. In the last Gallup poll taken while he was living, over 60% of Americans disapproved of Dr. King, with an astonishing 4 in 10 Americans giving him the lowest possible ranking among the options in the poll. Upon his assassination in 1968, nearly one in three Americans blamed him for bringing those actions upon himself, and only four in ten Americans expressed sadness or anger at this tragic event.

I cite these statistics not to engender shame or embarrassment about a not-so-distant era of our past, but rather as a hopeful frame through which to celebrate the progress we have made since then. By 1999, nearly 90% of Americans identified Dr. King as a man they admired. In a more recent poll, some 95% of Americans consider Dr. King to be an important American figure. What strikes me about this recent data is that nearly 90% of Americans who today are aged 65 or older have a favorable view of Dr. King. In 1966, the figure among those same people was just 41%.

This is a testament to us as Americans, to our great American spirit, because it shows we can change and have changed our minds. That rather than doubling or tripling down on the racism and division that Dr. King gave his life to defeat, we've embraced progress, we've re-evaluated prior misconceptions, and we've come out better for it. It shows, as Dr. King so famously observed, that the arc of the moral universe may be long, but it continually bends towards justice.

We know that, because rather than being the divisive figure he was to many while living, we now set aside a day each year to honor him as a state and a nation. Rather than having to march to Washington for civil rights, Dr. King now stands immortal on our National Mall, a sentinel guarding the unfinished but ever-progressing work of his life.

So let those of us who are elected to serve our fellow citizens today recommit to marching arm-in-arm with Dr. King, to be worthy stewards of his legacy, and to have the humility to be ever-mindful that, like it has been with Dr. King, history may judge us quite differently than we view ourselves in this moment.

REQUEST

REP. BOSCH REQUESTED that the remarks of Reps. Lefor and Ista be printed in the Journal, which request was granted.

MESSAGE TO THE SENATE FROM THE HOUSE (BUELL J. REICH, CHIEF CLERK)
