

Congress needs to protect the wild horses at Theodore Roosevelt National Park because they are a living tribute to Theodore Roosevelt's conservation legacy, have no federal protection, and are a major tourism draw. The public overwhelmingly supports the protection of the horses, and their removal could have significant economic and environmental consequences.