REMARKS OF AXEL DITTMANN, DEPUTY AMBASSADOR OF GERMANY

Absolute pleasure. I landed here with my colleague yesterday evening. So, I've been here now for 12 hours in North Dakota. Already feel at home. There's a lot of German heritage here, so that's really fantastic. And it's also very, very interesting state for me to get to know. A lot of energy. Agriculture. Yes. And other things. And as I understand, also in sports. Very successful. I learned that the NDSU just won the championship and that the team will travel to Washington, D.C. very soon.

So, foreign relations. I would like to say a few words. Thank you so much for giving me the time and to have a look at the transatlantic relations. We are living in momentous times. We have the continuing war in Ukraine, conflict in the Middle East. We have geopolitical tensions between the U.S., West, China. We have seen the cooperation between Russia, China, North Korea, Iran, and I think this is really the framework for the redefinition off transatlantic relations--economic and security. I think it's also fair to see what has to say with that. We are living in a moment. But we also have tensions. And I would like to address some of the issues which I feel are both here and to really make the case and give you my strong conviction that the transatlantic relations are strong. That we need to work on together.

So, thank you. Let me start with some numbers. The trade between the United States and Europe, and the United States and Germany. The US is our #1 trading partner. And so it's not just about trade, it's also about our mutual investment. In the U.S., we have 6000 German companies. They have invested more than €600 billion. They have created 1,000,000 jobs. All these companies are run by Americans. We have a huge investment of the U.S. in Germany. They created top jobs and we are extremely grateful for that. So, all I want to say is this is so important, and we hope we will not have a big confrontation on trade. We believe the close economic cooperation is really win-win. For both of us.

I would like to mention things where there's also discussion and difficulty and concerns. About what are we doing in Europe? One question is the question of economic competitiveness, and the other is a question of defense.

On competitiveness, I can say Germany is of course, a strong economy. We are the third largest economy in the world. But if I look here, the US economy is strong. It's stronger. You have a higher productivity, energy prices alone. And so we have to chase after that and we have to make reforms to be also competitive. To be also better and stronger partner. And I can tell you that we are addressing this issue. We have a big reform blueprint. Which we will address together in the European Union. The drug report to cut regulations, to lower energy prices, and really to become good. An even better place for American investment and economic exchange. And I can say that we in Germany were just forming a new government, and we took a big decision to create a special fund for infrastructure. Investments in the order of €500 million. So, what is it? $520 Billion US Dollars. This will be done, to be infrastructure investment which will benefit also US investors in Germany. So, I'm telling you something we have to do. We are addressing it. It will benefit our cooperation.

The other issue is, of course, defense. The U.S. has been the backbone of security in Europe over there the last eight years. We are extremely grateful for that. I'm here in the state of North Dakota... We spoke about the nuclear missile silos, which are also protecting us in Europe. And we are grateful for that. Now the US has shown a huge part of defense costs and countries in Europe have also contributed. But maybe not enough. I can tell you that we are stepping up to that. And it's not only supporting Ukraine. I can tell you that Ukraine--we have given Ukraine alone over $40 billion U.S. dollars. We have more than 1,000,000 Ukrainian refugees in Germany, and military support for Ukraine this year. Again, $8 billion. We just doubled it last week, so we are strong there. But also on defense in Europe, we understand we have to do more. We must shoulder more of the burden and there's two numbers I would like to put here. One is the 2/3 of NATO members are now contributing more than 2% of their GDP to Defense. And we know in Germany this number has to be even bigger. So, the new government has taken another decision not just to have this €500 million infrastructure. But we will exempt all our defense expenditure from our constitutionally mandated debt break and that will mean huge additional search in our defense spending.

We will have a combat brigade in Lithuania. 5000 people. So, we are really doing our part. I can say we are grateful for the US involvement. Continuing involvement in Europe will do more. And we see this as a huge part.

So, there is so much to work together. Europe knows this development and we are doing that good framework, and on that basis I just want to say again the joint values that we have are so strong that people exchange the economic exchange and I think that is the basis to continue: to work together through all the different global challenges. Think about China, other places, and we will be strong and grateful that we think about. As we have to see in DC can do our modest part and I'm so grateful that you gave me the opportunity to give you this short overview. Thank you so much and I wish you successful continuing legislative session. Thank you for giving me the time.
